DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

1. The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

2. Claims 95-116 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

3. Claim 95 recites “the content”, “the communication integration application”, “another application”, “different communication applications”, and “the other application” as seen below (highlighted) :

“means arranged to extract selected information from a shared memory store by copying the content of the shared memory store to a memory store of said communications integration application, wherein the content copied comprises information selected by a user in another application operating in the same environment as the communications integration application and copied by the user to the shared memory store, wherein the information copied by the user to the shared memory store enables the information automatically extracted by the communications integration application from its own memory store to be shared between different communication applications arranged to run on the user's terminal, wherein the other application is configured to at least write to the said shared memory store and the communications integration application is configured to at least read from the said shared memory store”.

It is unclear “the content” would be copied by which application. Is it the communications integration application? Or is it the other application? Or is it the communications integration application from its own memory store to be shared between different communication applications?

Furthermore, “the content” renders it indefinite since the content was never recited previously. Therefore, failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

4. Claims 96-116 are rejected since they are depending on rejected claim 95.
5. Claim 115 recites “a computer readable storage medium” which is not disclosed in the Specification render indefinite.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

6. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

7. Claims 114-116 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter. The language of the claim raises a question as to whether the claim is directed merely to an abstract idea that is not tied to a technological art, environment or machine which would result in a practical application producing a concrete, useful, and tangible result to form the basis of statutory subject matter under 35 U.S.C. 101.

4. Claims 114-116 claim the non-statutory subject matter of a program means. Data structures not claimed as embodied in computer-readable media are descriptive material per se and are not statutory because they are not capable of causing functional change in the computer. See, e.g., Warmerdam, 33 F.3d at 1361, 31 USPQ2d at 1754 (claim to a data structure per se held nonstatutory). Therefore, since the claimed programs are not tangibly embodied in a physical medium and encoded on a computer-readable medium then the Applicants has not complied with 35 U.S.C 101.

More specifically, claim 114 recites “an integrated communications application arranged for use on a terminal”. Claim 115 depends on 114 which makes it indefinite. Claim 116 recites “A communications integration application arranged for use in an intelligent communications system”.

The U.S. Patent and Trademark Office's current practice requires that a computer program (or application program, or software program, or communication integration application...) be claimed in the following manner: “A tangible computer readable medium comprising code which when executed causes a computer to perform the method of the claimed invention.
